FRANK M. McCANN

On October 7th the Honorable Watkins M. Abbitt, Fourth District Representative in Congress addressed the Dinwiddie Chapter of the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties. In the body of Rep. Abbitt's speech, he said, "There may be those in Virginia who are weakening and will be willing to accept some compliance (with the Supreme Court decision on desegregation) because of the great pressure extended upon the Commonwealth by the Federal Judicial oligarchy which is pouncing upon us. If there are such, they should remind themselves of how Benedict Arnold felt at Valley Forge and what he later did to his country. If there are any Benedict Arnolds in our group they must be ferreted out so that the people will know whom to follow and whom not to follow."

Later in the same speech Rep. Abbitt said, "The Attorney General of North Carolina has recently pointed the finger of scorn at Virginia. Like Judas Iscariot he has betrayed his people and wants to take the heat off himself by pointing at Virginia. North Carolina, because of its lack of leadership is integrated. Thank God Virginia does not lack leaders during our terrible crisis."

Thursday night October 30, 1958 in a speech before an audience of Chesterfield Democrats, State Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr., said, "The Virginia people Tuesday will have an opportunity not only to reelect able, experienced, courageous, democratic members of the U. S. Congress, but at the same time they will have an opportunity to issue a stinging rebuke to a Washington Court which is seeking to control the most local of all local functions, the public schools."

Governor J. Lindsay Almond in his speech Thursday, to an evening assembly of the Virginia Education Association, blamed the Federal Courts for keeping the nine schools for white children closed in Warren County, Charlottesville and Norfolk.

As a citizen, and as an independent Republican candidate for Congress from the Fourth District of Virginia, I feel it's my duty to point out some interesting facts overlooked by these three distinguished gentlemen.

FIRST: After the Supreme Court decision of 1954, the leaders of Virginia set up the Gray Commission which came up with the "Gray Plan" which was subsequently copied by North Carolina. The Gray report bore the signatures of Virginia leaders who now occupy high offices in Virginia government and was hailed by others as a plan that would prevent forced integration because under the plan any parent who did not wish to have his child attend an integrated school could send the child to a private nonsectarian school and obtain funds, to the extent of the pro rata cost per child of educating children in the public integrated schools, from the state or locality. It was explained to the people that an amendment to the Virginia Constitution was necessary so that legislation enacting the "Gray Plan" could be passed under the Virginia Constitution.

SECOND: The Virginia leaders met and rejected the Gray Plan as being contrary to the wants of the people, and in turn the Virginia legislators passed the "massive resistance" laws. The massive resistance laws are inconsistent with the spirit of the 1956 Amendments to the Virginia Constitution, because under massive resistance no interested public school is open so that a parent can exercise the option of not sending his child to it and instead send the child to a private nonsectarian school, and, thereby become eligible for tuition grants.

Further the massive resistance laws are inconsistent with the principle that "local functions should be taken care of locally" which State Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr., expounds in rebuking the Washington Court for "seeking to control the most local of all local functions, the public schools."

THIRD: Governor J. Lindsey Almond was elected on a platform having massive resistance as one of its major planks. The purpose of massive resistance is to cause the Supreme Court (in effect) to reverse its 1954 desegregation decision, but in this endeavor it would be asking the Court to do the very thing the leaders of Virginia and others have said the Supreme Court cannot do, that is, to amend the Constitution of the United States by changing its (the Court's) interpretation of the Constitution. The two positions are inconsistent.

FOURTH: The U. S. Constitution can be amended by 3/4 of the States of the United States.

What conclusions can be drawn from these facts?

It appears that at one time the leaders of Virginia were pursuing the only logical course there was to follow under the 1954 Supreme Court decision, that is, they recognized the decision as being the law of the land and worked out a plan so as to comply with it without disrupting public education. The result was the Gray Plan and the 1956 Constitutional Amendment to the Virginia Constitution.

There is no doubt that the majority of the people of Virginia did not want desegregation, and still do not want it, but, as I learned before I was hardly off my Father's knee, there are lots of wants that cannot be satisfied without going through proper channels and many not satisfied at all.

It further appears that the Virginia leaders then decided to desert the path of wise leadership and plunged into massive resistance because it has great appeal for the people who don't want integration, the people who relied upon their leaders for leadership.

It can hardly be expected that the people would demand to go back to the Gray Plan that they approved in 1956, when they are told by their leaders that massive resistance is the means we must use to combat the "Federal Judicial oligarchy" as Rep. Abbitt calls the Supreme Court of the United States.

This leads the people to believe that the combat is between the people (of Virginia) and the Supreme Court. This is simply not true, and even if it were, the Constitutional Admendment is the weapon to be used against the children of Virginia. Instead of learning about citizenship not irresponsible that seeks to nullify who wish to preserve garding the Gray Plan, the population by the ballot after the people had passing the 1956 Amendment to the tution providing for grants mentioned be

Thus the leaders trying to secure the for the massive onto the shoulders the very people Gray Plan, the very lieved them when resistance is the pverne Court decisio very people who fused by the re leaders that they to believe, but are their leaders if th tell them the truth

Now is the time of Virginia is the of whatever polic exercise sound judg Virginia ship of state even keel and cour sponsible leadership people advised and counsel.

Salt and Light

Lesson for November 9, 1958

WHAT are the marks of a Christian? It is true, only God sees the heart. "The Lord knoweth them that are his," as the Old Testament says. But we are not God. Have we any way of telling whether a person is a Christian or not? A farmer or a professor of agriculture may be able to tell wheat from rye while it is standing in the field; some city slickers can't do that. But even a person who never set foot on the sidewalks of New York, who wouldn't know either a wheat field or a rye field from a clover patch, knows wheat bread from rye bread.

Dr. Foreman

Jesus put it in a nutshell. "By their fruits ye shall know them," he said. A Christian has distinguishing features, he has fruits, he has "marks" by which he may be known.

Salt of the Earth

Talking not about, but to, his followers, Jesus said to them, "You are the salt of the earth." This is one of the marks of a Christian, it was a mark of Jesus. The Master's way of putting things is always direct, simple, poetic. We can say poetic because Jesus has a preference for figures of speech which can convey truth with more force than if he spelled everything out in long and difficult sentences. "You are the salt of the earth"—there it is in words of one syllable.

Salt is an essential, not a luxury. In Jesus' time and even today it is used as a preservative. It keeps things from going bad. There is no substitute for it. So the Christian, wherever he is, in whatever situation, ought to be the kind of person who keeps things from going bad. Every human situation carries in it the germs of evil, and without the saving salt of true Christians, the situation will molder and ferment and grow worse. When a human problem is to be solved, one mark of the Christian is that he is not part of the problem, he is part of the answer.

Light of the World

Jesus did not mind mixing metaphors. He loved parables, and a metaphor is just a one-phrase or one-word parable. He would make one point with one parable or figure of speech, and then make his next point with another. So he gives us another one-syllable word-picture of what Christians should be like. "You are the light of the world," he said. That tells us a great deal.

This world is a dark place. Jesus knew that. He was no Pollyanna, thinking the answer to everything is just to keep smiling. Tears often fit better than smiles, in this world. But still the world can be brighter than it is. Christians sometimes forget this. We sit around and grumble because the world is so dark. Who turned off the lights? Why, says Jesus, YOU are the light of the world. It's not your business to complain of the dark, it is your business to shine.

There are two opposite faults in lighting, as every one who has been to church knows. One is to put the lights so they shine in everybody's eye. A glaring light doesn't help the eyes, it hurts them. On the other hand, lights can be so few or so weak that they only make the darkness visible." A very dim light may be more exasperating than no light at all.

Needed Now

Salt and light were already pretty old-fashioned when Jesus was born. But now, almost 2,000 years after Christ, salt and light, older than ever, are just as necessary as they always were. Some things Jesus said about Christians are hard to understand. But this is easy even for children to understand. Christians, salt-and-light Christians are never out of date. Science does not get rid of our need for them. Suppose the dreams of the Buck Rogers crowd come true, as indeed some of them may in this age of space—suppose that we can extend the borders of the human race on out to Mars and who knows where next? Salt and light will be needed out yonder. And people will be needed there to be the salt and light of the pioneers.

Don't envy communities with salt-and-light people in them. Make your own community enviable—be one!

To The People of Appomattox County

I deeply appreciate the support that you have given me. I shall continue to exert my best efforts in representing all of the people of our District to the very best of my ability. I especially want to thank all of those who took an active part in the campaign.

The election returns in my opinion demonstrate once again that the people of this District not only want but demand a return to constitutional government and are not willing to submit to judicial tyranny or any other tyranny.
